I. Reading

India has a population over a billion people, nearly as large as China. It is the largest democracy and the largest English-speaking country in the world by population. India is a very diverse country. There are high mountains (the Himalayas) with lots of snow as well as tropical forests where tigers live. The tiger is India's national animal. Elephants and cobras are also common animals there.

India has a very ancient civilization that is 10,000 years old. The number system and chess were invented there. The world's first university started in India in 700 BC. India was one of the richest countries in the world in the 16th century. Its spices cost more than gold. In the 17th century the British took control of most of India. The British stayed there until 1947 when India became independent.

India is a multi-cultural country with different religions. Hindus (over 80% of population), Muslims, Christians, Buddhists and Sikhs live there. Hindi and English are the national languages but only 30% of the population speak Hindi. There are 17 other official languages so educated people in different parts of India use English as a common language. There are two images of India. The traditional image is that of a poor agricultural country with lots of people who can't write and read.

The other face of India is that of a modern dynamic economy that is growing very quickly. India is one of the world leaders in the computer industry. It has thousands of universities and Indians are some of the top software engineers in the world. Poverty and hunger are still a problem outside the cities. More than half of the population are poor and live on 2 $ a day.
