I. Reading

Between 1438 and 1532 the Incas built an empire with a population of about 12 million people in the Andes on the west coast of South America. They had no system of writing so little is known about their everyday lives. The Incas built large cities in the mountains. They built 23 thousand kilometres of roads through the mountains. They didn't have wheels so everything was carried by animals or people. Their main language was Quechua. Nowadays, this language is spoken by 11 million Indians in Peru, Ecuador, Colombia and Bolivia. Cuzco, which is now in Peru, was the capital city of the Inca Empire.

Hiram Bingham, a young American archaeologist, wanted to find a lost Inca city. He had always been fascinated by the Incas. He was a university professor and had studied their civilisation for many years. It was early morning on 24th July, 1911. Bingham and a guide went out in the heavy tropical rain and climbed up the mountains. On the way, they met a ten-year-old boy who led them through a jungle to a wall. They climbed over it and there it was Machu Picchu – the lost city of Incas! It looked like a dream. There were brilliant temples, royal houses, a big square and a lot of houses. Nobody knew it was there until Hiram Bingham found it.

The Incas built Machu Picchu on a mountain ridge, 2340 metres above sea level. When the Spanish invaded Peru, the Incas left Machu Picchu. Nobody knows why they did that, but some think it was because they were scared of the Spanish. Today, Machu Picchu is very difficult to get to because it is so high in the mountains. It has only one way in and a stone wall to protect it.

But many European and American tourists come to Peru to see this fascinating place – the most important tourist attraction in Peru.

Columbus discovered America in 1492. Then many Spanish people followed him and tried to look for gold and silver. One of them was Francisco Pizarro. He went to present Peru in 1531. His troop conquered the Inca Empire but they didn't find
