Endangered animals

There are hundreds of animals in danger. People destroy their homes or kill them.

Blue whales are intelligent - and they are the biggest animals on the planet. They are also the noisiest animals. They blow water 15 metres high - and they are noisier than a plane!

Komodo dragons live in the rainforests of Indonesia. They are the world's largest lizards and they are strong and aggressive. They are 2.8 metres long and weigh 135 kilogrammes. They can run, climb trees and swim. They are poisonous. They bite animals and the animals die in one or two days - then the dragons find the bodies and eat them. They are dangerous and sometimes kill people!

Diamondback rattlesnakes are the longest poisonous snakes in North America. They are 2.5 metres long. They eat rabbits and squirrels - but they only eat four times a year!

Peregrine falcons live in North America. They are the fastest birds in the world. They can fly at 145 kilometres an hour. They catch other birds in the air.

Sloths are large, slow animals with small heads. They are the most gentle and the laziest animals in the world. They spend their lives in trees in the rainforests of South and Central America. They sleep about 15 hours a day.

Platypuses live only in Eastern Australia close to freshwater rivers or lakes. They live for about 12 years. They eat insects and worms and they can eat a lot of them in one day. Platypuses lay eggs, but they feed their young with milk. They have beaks like ducks.
