Festivals

Christians all over the world celebrate Christmas on 25th December. They celebrate the birth of Christ. In the middle of December people send cards to their friends and family, prepare presents and buy a green tree. Then they decorate it with lights and glass balls. On Christmas Day, people give each other presents, eat special meals and families come together to celebrate it.

Thanksgiving Day is an American special day. It is on the fourth Thursday in November. Everyone goes home to eat a meal with their family. The food is always the same: turkey and pumpkin pie. The festival is to remember the first settlers who survived a hard winter and thanked God for it.

Diwali means 'a row of lights'. It is an important religious festival in India, for Hindus and Sikhs. It is usually celebrated in September. Families put rows of lamps in their homes and streets. They visit the temple and pray for happiness in the future. People wear new clothes, give each other presents and eat special spicy food and sweets.

St. Patrick's Day is a national holiday in Ireland. It's in March. There are big parties and parades in Ireland and in New York. It is traditional to wear green clothes on St. Patrick's Day.

Jewish people all over the world celebrate Hanukka in December. The festival celebrates a miracle from ancient times, when the lights in the temple burned for eight days without oil. So they light candles for eight days. They have parties with sweets and cakes and visit their relatives. Children get a lot of presents.
