I. READING

Natural History Museum in London is one of the most popular visitor attractions in the UK. Every year about two million visitors come there.

Anna has been working for the museum for a year. She has been very busy recently preparing the museum’s latest exhibition Voyages of Discovery. It runs until next spring. It’s the first exhibition to explore 18th and 19th century British sea voyages. This was the first exhibition she has seen being organised. She had to plan notes for her boss’s speech for the opening reception and work closely with the press office arranging interviews.

Not many people know that three hundred scientists work there carrying out lots of research. This means that there are plenty of meetings to organize. But they always keep Fridays free of appointments to do some research and just think about future exhibits.

Anna always wanted to work in a museum and finally she’s managed it. She studied archaeology as a way of entering the museum world, and she has dreamed of becoming a museum curator.

She’s so interested in what she’s doing, that after work, she buys books on natural history and she attends the museum’s lectures. She’s even started bird watching at the weekends.
