I. READING

Martin is thirteen years old. He lives in Manchester in England. He has a very strange pet. He owns a two-year-old tarantula called Tammy.

Tarantulas look like big, hairy spiders. They live in tropical South America, Africa and Asia. They eat insects, lizards, mice and even small birds.

In the wild they can live about twenty-five years and can grow to be thirty centimetres across - about the same size as a tortoise!

Martin keeps his pet in an aquarium. He feeds Tammy on worms from the garden but in winter he has to buy them from a fishing shop. Tammy eats five worms a day.

Tarantulas are poisonous. Their bites can be painful to a people but they aren't dangerous. Tammy is still young, so its poison isn't strong.
